2. Dieline

a. First Iteration

- Our original dieline was a cube with a transparent window to showcase the perfume. The transparent window also allowed a second use of the box: an art display. Cards would be provided with the packaging, with brand information on one side and art on the other side. Users would be able to display the art provided with the help of the box.

b. First Iteration: Issues

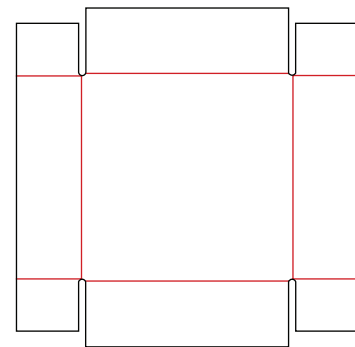

- The problem with our original dieline was that it added to manufacturing costs because of the folding mechanism, and the transparent window would get scratched up during manufacturing and shipping.
- Also, it didn't make sense for a luxury product's packaging to be multi-purpose, it cheapened the product in some way.

c. Final Dieline

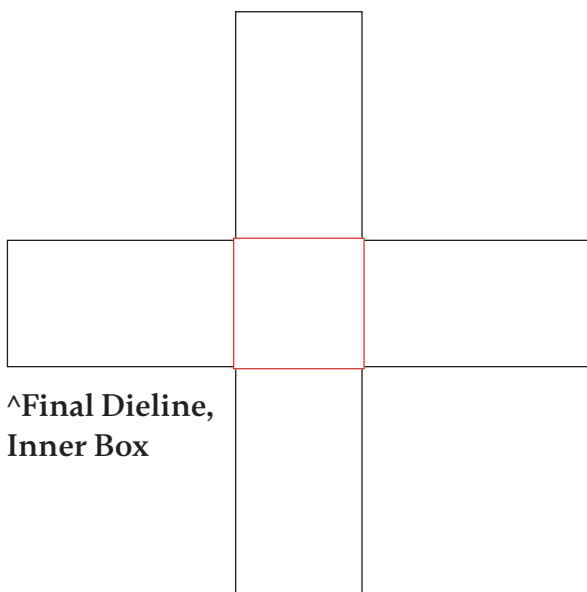

- The final dieline is made up of two cuboids: one inside, and one outside. The outer box functions as a lid, while the inner box contains the perfume and is made up of a base and four flaps.
- Outer box/lid: This part contains the main brand messaging: the front, back, top and sides of the perfume.
- Inner box: This part contains additional brand information which opens up when the user pulls out the outer box/lid.

3. Visual Design

a. Visual Design Approaches

- Before we selected a final approach, we experimented with different directions that we could go forward with. We made moodboards and experimented with different colours and fonts.
- Perfume as heavenly nectar: “Indulge in this piece of heaven. One spritz and you get all the knowledge in the world. Ancient knowledge. Intoxicate yourself, experience luxury the Indian way.”
- Perfume as a portable travel experience: “You’ll be taken away to faraway lands with a spritz of this perfume! Watch the landscapes, take it all in, this is your vacation, your dream. Soulful diaries and places you could not imagine, but only experience.”
- Perfume in terms of artisan effort: “This perfume has been crafted by expert hands. It’s been presented to you, but do you know how much effort has been put in? Let’s unravel the basket.”

- b. Selected Approach: We selected a combination of perfume as a portable travel experience and perfume as heavenly nectar. We wanted to invoke a heavenly and aspirational feel to position our perfume as true luxury.
- c. Brand Name: Amrut (Inspired by the heavenly nectar of knowledge and immortality in Indian mythology.)
- d. Logo: Our logo is a custom-made blend of serif and script typefaces, with a flair of strokes and extensions making it unique in its own way. Keywords: Elegant, Heavenly, Timeless.
- e. Brand Illustrations: Our brand illustrations embody “perfume as a portable travel experience”, and invoke a feeling of wanting to experience the atmosphere and scenery shown in the illustrations. The perfume bottle stands at the center of the scene, making the product clear. Keywords: Serene, Atmospheric, Enticing.
- f. Font: We used Adobe Jenson Pro, (specifically the light and italic versions) because it works well with the elegance of the logo, and makes the product look timeless because of the serifs.
- g. Layout, Outer Box: Windows stand at the center of the concept for our layout. The front and the sides of the packaging showcase illustrations within the windows. The logo, product name and main product details are shown on these three sides, as well as the top side.
- h. Layout, Inner Box: When the user pulls out the outer box, the outer part of the inner box is revealed, which showcases scenery related to the perfume. When the user pulls it out fully, the inner part of the inner box is revealed, which has illustrations and information about the brand as well as the product. The bottom of the product contains the ingredients list, warnings and notices, symbols, company details and the barcode.
